A name you can trust

When it comes to IT you have to be very careful who you entrust your work too. Computers are an integral part of many people's lives, allowing them to work, socialise, shop and in many cases store music and irreplaceable pictures, the loss of which can cause distress and upset.

These days it seems far too easy to set yourself up as an "IT Technician" with no real experience or relevant qualifications.

Andrew Coy of Killer-Byte said: "These 'cowboy' IT technicians cause untold amounts of problems for their unfortunate customers due to the lack of subject knowledge - and generally charge the earth to do so, we have had many customers who have come to us in desperation that we can fix their original issue and the problems associated with so called repairs carried out by these rouge traders, so it was refreshing when we heard about the Derbyshire County Councils Trusted Trader scheme and their attempts to put an end to it."

The Derbyshire Trusted Trader is a scheme set up by Derbyshire County Council to recognise and certify professionals in different industries who meet a set of strict criteria such as appropriate qualifications, professional body membership and most importantly references from their customers.

Extensive background checks are carried out to ensure that the business is trading fairly before granting membership.
